Short Film Production Treatment

A treatment is a document that presents the story idea of your film before writing the entire script. Treatments are often written in present tense, in a narrative-like prose, and highlight the most important information about your film, including title, logline, story summary, and character descriptions. Treatment are often used in the initial stages of idea generation and will be used to support a pitch and sell your film idea to producers or production members.

Title
Splicer
Logline
Hilariously dark
Summary
Two friends go to a party in an abandoned building but what they don't know that its been take over by a killer called splicer. The two guys then go to explore through the building making jokes out of everything they see. The killer stalks them trying to figure out why they aren't scared of him and just walk past him. My movie is mainly a POV movie going off the perspective of Pidghey Cooljo, the whole movie is set to be an open-ended and linear story because I want there to be a cliff hanger to keep the audience on their heels. I enjoy leaving the audience keep guessing and wanting to find out more and I also want to make it linear because if it's all over the place then it would ruin the first-person perspective and I rather stay loyal to the POV style. There may be an audio code so that it can notify the audience of when the killer is around.
Narrative
The movie will be told through the perspective of Pidghey Cooljo and I aim to replicate his feelings through the camera due to the whole POV style, since it's a short film I want to make the whole story line as clear and as straight forward as possible so we don't confuse the audience and to not break the POV code.
