

When filming I will start with the interview because that would be the hardest to get it out of the way and not be stuck trying to film it last second and I would then get a better idea of how to film the rest of the documentary and how to put the interview into documentary and how to continue the rest of the documentary after the interview. For the interview I would first introduce it before showing the interview. I will first introduce the interviewee and then explain what I am going to ask them about and then start asking the questions on their opinions of the Pokémon games changes over the years and what they think of all the changes in the game mechanics.

When I finish the interview, I will then start the documentary and start with the introduction into the documentary and will start with a fact about the Pokémon games and I would then talk about how they changed throughout the year, and I will then show the different trailers and gameplay and talk about the difference between each one. I will then give my opinions on the game and what I think they could change and what I think about the changes and what they should have kept in the games and what I think about each game.

At the end of the documentary, I will give my thoughts on the new game and what I think about the new mechanic and all the new Pokémon and how it is different from the over games. I will also ask in the interview about their thoughts of the new game and mechanics and how they could change.