Comments:

Well done Robert, you have completed this project to a good standard. The work submitted meets all the assessment criteria and is of a high standard. You have worked consistently throughout the project to develop your ensemble musicianship and bass skills.

Context – You have shown that you understand the requirements of this project through your analysis of a live performance and examination of promotional materials and band logos. You could have detailed more live performance analysis examples in different genres. You have briefly detailed health and safety requirements and how they apply to live performance along with a very brief case study. You have detailed your personal aims for the project in the introduction. You could have investigated a variety of job roles within the music industry. You must demonstrate a comprehensive understanding of the subject to achieve an excellent grade.

Research – You did some detailed research into artwork and promotion that you applied to developing your own logo and promotional material. You researched health and safety as well as looking at a variety of contexts for live performance. You could have shown more research into the songs and artists you performed, alongside the learning of the material. When commenting on a website, article or video it is good practice to link to the sources in your work. To achieve an excellent you must research a wider variety of sources as well as use Harvard Referencing.

Practical Skills – You stayed on task throughout the project during rehearsals and worked well with other members of your group. Your bass playing was confident, and you displayed good rhythm, although your technique and sound are certainly areas for improvement. You were positive in most sessions and you developed as a musician and performer throughout the course of the project, culminating in a confident final performance. In future you should consider challenging yourself with more difficult bass parts as well as developing bass technique. You are becoming a capable multi-instrumentalist and I look forward to seeing you develop these skills throughout this year.

Evaluation and Reflection – Your evaluations and reflections are ongoing and you often have some interesting ideas for development, such as visuals and costumes as documented in your final project evaluation. Your mock and final performance evaluations are insightful. In your project evaluation you considered ways to improve in the future and the for other performances. Remember to always detail how you can improve. You can also try bringing research into evaluations to back up your points.

Live Performance – Your bass playing was confident and you contributed to an effective and enjoyable final performance – well done!

Overall, you have started the year well with this first project submission and I am glad you enjoyed the performance side of the project! You worked well as part of an ensemble and have developed as a performer. You could improve the presentation of your work by proofreading as there are several grammar and spelling mistakes. You need to be more meticulous with completing your portfolio if you wish to work consistently at this level or improve in future projects. You are a good performer and you should look for opportunities to perform outside of college in order to develop further as well as practicing your instruments.
